INDIANA STATE NORMAL SCHOOL

HISTORICAL SKETCH

The act of the General Assembly which created the State Normal School was approved December 20, 1865. This act defined the object of the school to be "the preparation of teachers for teaching in the common schools of Indiana," provided for the appointment of a board of trustees, the location of the buildings, the organization of a training school, the adoption of courses of study, and created the Normal School fund for the maintenance of the institution. The act further required the trustees to locate the school at the town or city of the State that should obligate itself to give the largest amount in cash or buildings and grounds to secure the school. The city of Terre Haute was the only place to offer any inducements to secure the institution. A tract of land three hundred feet square near the center of the city, valued at $25,000, and $50,000 in cash were offered, and the city agreed to maintain forever one-half the necessary expense of keeping the buildings and grounds in repair. This liberal offer was accepted and the construction of the building was begun. Aided by subsequent appropriations, the trustees were able to complete certain portions of the building, and the school was opened January 6, 1870. The professional training of teachers was an experiment in Indiana, and the institution began its work without the confidence and united support of the people of the State.

Twenty-three students were present on the opening day and this number increased to forty by the end of the term. The attendance has grown steadily since the opening of the school, and during the year ending June 28, 1906, 1,441 different students were enrolled. In 1887 the school had become so large that it was necessary for the high school of Terre Haute, which had occupied a portion of the building since its completion, to find new quarters, thus leaving the entire building of three stories to be occupied by the Normal School alone.

On the forenoon of April 9, 1888, the building and its contents were almost totally destroyed by fire. Only the foundations were left unimpaired; the library, furniture, apparatus and everything in the building—the accumulation of eighteen years—were consumed. Terre Haute provided temporary quarters for the school, and, under the contract to maintain one-half the expense of repairs to the buildings and grounds, promptly gave $50,000 in cash with which to begin the work of rebuilding. The next General Assembly appropriated $100,000 for the completion of the building and the purchase of a new library, etc. With these sums the school constructed a commodious and beautiful building, and purchased an equipment for every department much superior to that possessed before the fire.

The Legislature of 1893 appropriated $40,000 for the construction of a new building to be used for gymnasiums, library and laboratories. The General Assembly of 1895 appropriated $20,000 and the General Assembly of two years later $10,000 with which to complete this building.

MATERIAL EQUIPMENT

The State Normal School occupies three large, handsome buildings, each four stories high. The larger building, constructed immediately after the fire of 1888, is about 190x150 feet, and is a very commodious, well-appointed school building. It contains an assembly room capable of seating three hundred persons, a beautiful chapel which seats comfortably one thousand persons, the president's office, reception room, cloak rooms, class rooms, wash rooms, etc. It is, architecturally, one of the most beautiful buildings in the State, and its internal arrangement is well adapted to the purpose for which it was constructed.

The library building is about 100x100 feet, and is, architecturally, in general harmony with the larger building. The basement story contains the two gymnasiums; the second story is occupied by the library. This is a large, well-lighted, beautiful room, admirably adapted to library use. The third story is occupied by the several science departments. The fourth story is used by the literary societies and the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. The library is equipped with every needed appliance, and contains about 40,000 well-selected volumes. The chemical, biological and physical laboratories on the third floor are substantially finished and are equipped with everything needed for the science work of the school.

A handsome four-story model or training school building has recently been constructed and is occupied by the training school and the department of manual training.

Probably there are few, if any, normal schools in the United States that are more fully equipped in all their departments for work than is this institution.

THE PURPOSE OF THE SCHOOL

The statute of 1865 which created the Indiana State Normal School clearly defined its object. This was declared to be "the preparation of teachers for teaching in the common schools of Indiana." The State Normal School, then, is not an institution for general culture for its own sake; it is a special school—a professional school. Its sole purpose is to confer on its students that education, discipline, professional training and practical skill which will best fit them for teaching in the public schools of Indiana. The school limits its attention and work to this one thing—the preparation of teachers for teaching in the common schools of Indiana. No person is admitted who does not enter for the purpose of preparing to teach in the common schools of the State, and all the work of the school has this one end in view. Perhaps a brief statement of the school's work in its attempt to fulfill this one object of its existence may aid some to determine whether or not they wish to become students.

Since the common schools of the State consist largely of the district and grade schools and the greater part of the common school work is in the elementary or common branches, the State Normal School seeks first of all to ground its students (such as do not already possess this knowledge) thoroughly in the common or legal branches of study. These lie at the foundation of all learning and scholarship. They are indeed the "fundamental branches of learning." It is also true that the great majority of pupils in the public schools do not advance beyond these elementary subjects. If the State's system of common schools is to become what its founders designed it to be, it must be largely through the efficient teaching of these elementary branches. About one year of the Normal School course is devoted to a thorough, reflective study of these. They are not pursued and taught as in a common elementary school. The student is required to possess the usual general knowledge of these subjects to be admitted. In the Normal School he is led to make a more critical and philosophical investigation of the facts and subject-matter than he has hitherto done. He now studies these subjects from a professional point of view, from a teacher's standpoint. His own method of studying them, and the method of presenting them appropriate to the different grades of the public schools, are themselves objects of attention and study. The whole presentation of the subject is surrounded by a pedagogical atmosphere which is altogether absent from the ordinary school. The student is not only acquiring a larger and better knowledge of the subjects themselves, but he is learning to teach them. All persons are required to pursue the common school branches before graduating except college and commissioned high school graduates and persons holding three years', sixty months', professional or life State licenses.

In the next place the course in the Normal School requires every student to pursue a line of more strictly professional work—that is, work which is designed to give special insight into all educational questions and to prepare the individual for intelligent and reasonable charge of a school. This line of study consists of educational psychology, experimental psychology, theory of the school, the principles of methods, observation in the training schools and the interpretation of the teaching observed, child-study, history of education, school supervision, school systems of Europe and America, science of education, and practice in the training schools. In this more strictly professional department of the students' work every phase of education receives extended, thorough and systematic treatment—the historical, the theoretical and the practical. The whole object of this is to lead the student to acquire a knowledge of the principles of education and a reasonable degree of skill in applying these as a teacher. He is to be freed from obedience to mere prescription and rule as a teacher and acquire genuine originality and true individuality. Rational understanding of his vocation is aimed at and the power to determine from the standpoint of principle what the process and work of the school should be.

In the third place, the school requires its students to pursue such advanced lines and courses of study as will best reinforce the knowledge of the common school branches, and at the same time best prepare them for the more advanced grades of public school work. Courses in Latin, German, History, Mathematics, Literature, Science, etc., are offered, and no student can graduate who does not in addition to his study of the common branches and the professional line, pursue a sufficient number of these to complete four years' work in the school. Like the common school subjects, these branches are studied constantly from the teacher's point of view, and the student is frequently led to reflect upon their value as means of education, the method by which they are being studied, methods of teaching these appropriate to the grades in which they are studied, etc. The object is to make the entire work of the school strongly and distinctively professional.

EXPLANATION OF COURSES AND MISCELLANEOUS INFORMATION

DIVISION OF YEAR

The school year is divided into four terms, denoted respectively the fall, winter, spring and summer terms. The first three are each thirteen weeks long; the summer term is six weeks in length.

CREDITS

The term "credit" is used to denote the successful completion of a course—thirteen weeks—in any subject.

COURSES LEADING TO GRADUATION

The State Normal School maintains five courses of study, as follows: (1) A four years' course; (2) an abridgment of this course for graduates of commissioned high schools; (3) an abridgment of the same course for persons holding one or more three years' licenses; (4) an abridgment of this course for persons holding professional or sixty months' licenses, and (5) a course for college or university graduates and persons holding life licenses.

THE COURSE OF FOUR YEARS requires fifty credits for graduation. It is designed to meet the needs of those persons that enter the school having the minimum scholarship. The object of this course is to give as thorough and complete a preparation for common school teaching as can be conferred in the period named. The various abridgments of this course are indicated under the next heading.

CONDITIONS OF ADMISSION

1. LEGAL.—Sixteen years of age, if females; eighteen, if males. Good health. Satisfactory evidence of undoubted moral character. A pledge that the applicant wishes to enter the school in good faith to prepare to teach, if practicable, in the public schools of Indiana.
2. SCHOLASTIC.—The following classes of students are admitted and credited, as explained below:

College graduates and holders of life State licenses are admitted without examination to the Senior class. Twelve credits—one year's work—are required for graduation. Eight of these must be professional subjects—educational psychology three terms, history of education one term, methods two terms, and observation and practice in the training school two terms. The other four may be elected by the student from the remaining professional and academic subjects.

Holders of professional or sixty months' licenses are admitted without examination to the Junior class. Twenty-five credits are necessary to graduation. Of these eight must be the professional subjects named above. The other seventeen may be chosen from the remaining professional and academic subjects.

Holders of thirty-six months' licenses are admitted without examination to the Sophomore class. Such students receive fifteen credits on the course. Thirty-five additional credits are necessary for graduation. Of these the eight professional subjects named above and one term in rhetoric and composition are required. The other twenty-six may be elected from the remaining professional and academic subjects of the course.

Graduates of commissioned high schools are admitted without examination to the Sophomore class. Such persons receive fourteen credits on the course. Thirty-six additional credits are necessary for graduation. Of these eight (as above) are required to be professional subjects, one rhetoric and composition, and fifteen common school branches. The other twelve credits required for graduation may be made in subjects elected by the student from the remaining professional and academic subjects of the course. For exceptions, see page 32.

Holders of two years', one year or six months' licenses, graduates of non-commissioned high schools and persons that have completed at least three years' work in commissioned high schools are admitted without examination to the Freshman class. Fifty credits—four years' work—are necessary for graduation. Of these fifteen are required to be made in the common branches, one in rhetoric and composition, and eight in the professional subjects. The other twenty-six may be elected from the remaining professional and academic subjects of the course.

SPECIAL COURSES

Many persons are at work in the schools who do not expect to make teaching their life work. They are, however, devoted to the work of teaching while engaged in it, and conscientiously desire to render efficient service as teachers. Others who have adopted teaching as their life vocation are so situated that it is impracticable at present for them to attend the State Normal School during the period necessary to graduation. Applications are received from many of these who desire to take a course of one year or more, devoting their time exclusively to such branches as they are required to teach and to certain phases of pedagogical study that bear directly on the problems of instruction and school management that confront them from day to day.

To provide helpful work for these classes of teachers, adapted to their situation and needs, the State Normal School offers a variety of one-year courses. These short courses include such academic subjects, of their own selection, as will meet the urgent needs of the classes of teachers referred to, also instruction in educational psychology, history of education, the principles of methods, and other pedagogical subjects. The opportunity is also given to observe and study, under careful direction, the work of the model or training schools. These schools include a country training school, and eight grades of the city schools which are located in the Normal School building. Competent, skilled critic teachers are in charge of these schools. They are designed to be model schools and to furnish teachers the opportunity to observe and study school work in all grades under the best possible conditions. By an arrangement with the city school authorities of Terre Haute, opportunity is given also to observe the work in all departments of the Terre Haute High School.

TIME FOR ENTERING

For all reasons it is best to be present at the opening of the term, but students are admitted at any time in the year. Experience has shown that persons entering several days or weeks late and attempting to carry the regular number of studies and make a full term's credits are usually crippled in their work throughout the term. Hereafter persons entering three weeks or more after the opening of the term will be limited for the term to such number of studies as they can profitably carry.

CERTIFICATES AND DIPLOMAS

Under the law, when students complete the course of study, they receive certificates of graduation, not diplomas. "At the expiration of two years after graduation, satisfactory evidence of professional ability to instruct and manage a school having been received, they (graduates) shall be entitled to a diploma appropriate to such professional degrees as the trustees shall confer upon them; which diplomas shall be considered sufficient evidence of qualification to teach in any of the schools of the State."

DISCIPLINE OF THE SCHOOL

The end of all school government and discipline, intelligently conceived and administered, is the rational self-control and self-direction of the pupil. This is to be the outcome in the pupil. The effort is made to derive all rules of government from the inherent nature and purposes of the organization itself. This is the true basis of such rules; from this alone they derive their authority, and not from the teacher's will and utterance. A system of school regulations which aims only at arbitrary restraint, without leading the pupil to order his conduct by clearly conceived principles of right doing, lacks the most essential educative qualities. The formation of correct habits of thought and action, the development of worthy character; these are the true aims of school discipline. The discipline of the Normal School is administered in this general thought and spirit. Students are led to see the reasonableness of the requirements made of them, so that their obedience may be intelligent and educative. In respect to discipline, as in all other particulars, the Normal School seeks to make itself in fact what it must be by definition—a model school.

DEAN OF WOMEN

The Dean of Women has general supervision of the women of the school. By virtue of her office the Dean gives special attention to the matters of health, manners, morals and general deportment of the women. It is hoped that the Dean may be of service to the women by counsel, advice and other forms of helpfulness along the lines of peculiar interest to them. A rest room has been equipped for the use of the women of the school, and every effort will be put forth to make them feel at home.

A list of desirable rooms and boarding places is kept on file in the office of the Dean, and it is the intention to assist the young women in finding satisfactory locations at reasonable prices. It is especially urged that young women, coming to the school for the first time, confer with the Dean before making definite arrangements as to rooms.

Past experience has demonstrated the desirability of requiring the women not to engage rooms where members of the opposite sex are found, students or others. In case of seemingly justifiable exceptions to this rule, the matter should first be acted upon by the Dean, before definite arrangements are made. Students disregarding this request may be required to change their locations.

Assistance will be given, as far as possible, to women desiring to find work to pay part of their expenses.

Correspondence relating to the special work of this office is invited, and should be addressed to Martina C. Erickson, Dean of Women, Indiana State Normal School.

EXPENSES

Board, including fuel and light, can be had in good families at $3 to $4 per week, according to the quality of accommodations. There are good facilities for self-boarding and for club-boarding in the city at a cost of $1.75 to $2.00 per week. Nearly all the students board in clubs, thus reducing their entire expenses for board and room rent to $2.50 or $3.00 per week for good accommodations. The expenses of many do not exceed $2.25 per week. The only charge made by the school is a library fee of $2 per term.

The necessary expenses for a year in the Normal School will not vary greatly from the following estimate:

Room rent, 39 weeks, at $1.....	$39 00
Board, 39 weeks, at $2.....	78 00
Fuel and lights.....	7 50
Washing and incidentals.....	20 00
Library fee, $2 per term.....	6 00
Books and stationery.....	10 00

Necessary expenses for one year, 39 weeks..$160 50

ELECTIVE WORK

Students are required to elect work by subjects or courses, not by terms. When a student elects a subject he is required to take a year's work in that subject, unless, for good reasons, he is permitted by the faculty to discontinue it and take up another line of study in its place.

All students above the preparatory course are permitted to choose for themselves the order in which they will pursue the subjects of the course.

ADVANCED STANDING BY EXAMINATION

The Normal School is authorized to give a formal credit on its course to the following classes of students: (1) College graduates; (2) graduates of commissioned high schools; (3) persons holding life State licenses; (4) persons holding professional or sixty months' licenses; (5) persons holding three-years' county licenses. These are all admitted without examination.

Persons not included in the above named classes, and wishing to be credited with any subjects in the course, are required to pass thorough, satisfactory examinations in such subjects. Effort is made to give every person full credit for all knowledge of subjects possessed on entering, and to assist him to advance as rapidly and to graduate as soon as is consistent with a thorough teacher's knowledge of the subjects studied.

Examinations conducted for passing persons out of given subjects without detailed study of these in the school are made thorough, extended and professional in character. The object is not simply to test the applicant's knowledge of the subject in its academic aspects, but to ascertain what he knows of it from a teacher's point of view. The psychology of the subject, its method and its educational value are considered in these examinations.

Examinations for advanced standing will hereafter be conducted on the first and second days of each term.

Persons wishing to substitute credits on the Normal School course that have been made at other reputable institutions are referred to the various heads of departments, who will make such investigations and conduct such examinations as they deem best. Just credit will be given for all scholarship and professional training acquired at other institutions.

YOUNG MEN'S AND YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS

The Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. are the two Christian organizations of the school. They have for their principal object the development of a more perfect Christian character in each of their members and the bringing of those who have never known the Christian life to a realization of its beauty and power.

The associations employ different means to accomplish their purpose. Each association holds one regular devotional meeting every week. The young men's meeting is held on Sunday at 8:30 a. m. in the Association Room; the young women's meeting is held on Thursday at 4 p. m. at the same place.

Regular courses of Bible study are planned and carried out each year. The work as now planned requires four years for its completion.

Two receptions are given each term. The first, at the beginning of the term, is for the reception of the new students. A very commendable feature of these receptions is the spirit manifested by the old students in helping the new students to feel at home.

There are two classes of members in each of the associations, the "active" and the "associate." The first is made up of those connected in good standing with some evangelical church; the second class, of young men and women of good moral character who are interested in Christian work, though not connected with any church.

The Association room is located on the fourth floor of the new building, and is furnished with piano, desk, chairs and hymn books—in fact, everything that is needed to conserve the interests of the associations.

CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION HOUSES

Each of the above organizations has rented and furnished a large house to be used as its headquarters and as a rooming place for its members. Large, well heated and well lighted rooms are rented at moderate prices. Reading and reception rooms materially increase the comfort and efficiency of the organizations.

COURSES OF STUDY

Students are given the greatest freedom in the choice and in the order of taking subjects. The course a student shall take is practically in his own hands. Without desiring in the least to curtail these privileges the faculty has arranged a number of suggestive courses with the thought that these may aid students in mapping out their work in the school. The two-year course is suggested for students who do not care to complete the work in the school required for graduation, but who wish to prepare to teach in the rural schools. The three-year courses, open to commissioned high school graduates, and to students holding three years' licenses, are arranged to prepare teachers for the upper grades and for high schools. It will be noticed that students electing these courses are not required to take the common school branches other than those indicated in the course elected and which have been chosen to reinforce the major subject.

TWO-YEAR COURSE

	FIRST TERM.	SECOND TERM.	THIRD TERM.
First Year.	The work of the first six grades in History. Physics. Latin or German. Music or Drawing. Writing.	English History. Chemistry. Grammar. Drawing or Music.	The work of the seventh and eighth grades in U.S. History. Physiology. Grammar. Botany.
Second Year.	Composition. Physiology. History of Education or Principles of Educational Psychology. Physical Geography.	Arithmetic or Algebra. Methods. Geography. Zoölogy.	Arithmetic or Algebra. Observation and Practice. Reading. Manual Training.

The student entering upon this course will be permitted to take this course in part and other courses in part. The rule regarding continuity of work is to be regarded in case the student taking this course afterwards concludes to complete the course for graduation.

The above course is arranged for those who wish to prepare for supervision of music in the public schools. The subjects in this course have been selected for the following reasons: The supervisor of music must use correct English, and understand the analysis and construction of language in order that he may correctly interpret the songs that he teaches. He should also understand grammar and composition, because of the distinct analogy between construction of melody and construction of composition. Reading is introduced, as it is also a direct aid to interpretation of songs. Mathematics aids in the understanding of the value of those characters which represent rhythmic movements, and also the work pertaining to sound which is given in physiology and physics. Writing is an aid to form, and drawing is especially helpful in devices and illustration of songs for primary grades. The history work chosen covers the period of the world's greatest musical development and activity, and the work in literature deals with song lyrics and their authors, and the men of literature who were contemporaries of the great masters of music. Psychology and methods give power in the organization and presentation of music as it is needed in the public schools, while in practice the theories which have been evolved throughout the course are tested and made actual through experience. Sufficient work in the gymnasium should be taken to give proper exercise and physical development.

SCIENTIFIC COURSE

Chemistry, three terms.

Physics, three terms.

Physiology, three terms.

Physiography, three terms.

Botany, three terms.

Additional work in the major subject, three terms.

Professional work, seven terms.

Electives, eight terms. These may be selected from the departments of History, Drawing, English, Mathematics, Languages, or the Common School Branches.

Students who select this course must, early in the course, elect some one of the above sciences as a major subject, and in this subject must do at least six terms of work.

Students entering this course should arrange the order in which these subjects are to be taken by conferring with the heads of departments concerned.

With the advice and consent of the faculty, students may substitute subjects in other courses for those in the course they have chosen, provided, first, that the required subjects be not omitted, and second, that the continuity of work be not broken. For credits given on diplomas and licenses see page 21.

COLLEGE PREPARATORY COURSE

Many students entering the Normal School expect to go to college after completing their course in the Normal School. Accordingly, they wish to take a course that will entitle them to the diploma of the Normal School on graduation and that will allow them to enter the best colleges and universities without entrance conditions to be made up later. For such persons the following course is suggested.

	FIRST TERM.	SECOND TERM.	THIRD TERM.

*The student may elect eight terms of either Latin or German, and is required to take four terms of the one not elected.

DEPARTMENTAL STATEMENTS

PROFESSIONAL WORK

The full course in required professional work in the school is eight successive terms, as follows:

Psychology I (second term of Sophomore year).

Psychology II (third term of Sophomore year).

Psychology III (first term of Junior year).

History of Education (second term of Junior year).

Method I (third term of Junior year).

Method II (first term of Senior year).

Practice I (second term of Senior year. Not offered in Summer term).

Practice II (third term of Senior year. Not offered in Summer term).

As this is a very meager requirement for professional work in a State Normal School, it is very important that students should take the work under such conditions as will render it most effective. The chief things necessary to make the work effective are that one subject only shall be taken during any given term, and that the subjects shall be taken in the order given above.

The professional course is regarded as a unit, and in consequence the student would not be permitted, except under conditions named on page 49 to enter upon the work in history of education before completing the work in psychology, to enter upon the work in method before completing the work in history of education, or to enter upon the practice work before having taken the course in method. The student may begin the work in the required psychology at any term prior to the second term of his Sophomore year. The beginning should not, however, be delayed beyond that term.

It is a regulation of the faculty that the continuity of subjects shall not be broken, i. e., when a student has entered upon the work of a given subject, as algebra, Latin, German, physics, etc., he should not leave such work before completing it in order to begin work in another subject. The student must, therefore, hold himself responsible for an arrangement of his work that will enable him to conform to this regulation of the faculty, and at the same time begin the required work in psychology not later than the second term of his Sophomore year. This will enable the student to complete the eight terms of required professional work by the end of the school course, carrying one required professional subject only during each term. The length of time to be given to the eight terms of professional work is considered a very important factor, and in consequence, the regulation that one professional subject only shall be taken during any one term will be closely adhered to.

The following are the exceptions to the above regulation concerning professional work:

1. College graduates are permitted to pursue more than one of the professional subjects during the same term. They are entitled to pursue three of the required subjects during the first term (Psychology I and II and History of Education), three during the second term (Psychology III, Method I and Practice I), and two during the third term (Method II and Practice II).

2. Students who hold a sixty months' license or a life license are permitted to pursue more than one professional subject during one term. They are entitled to pursue two of the required professional subjects during the last term of the Junior year (Psychology III and History of Education), and two subjects during the first term of the Senior year (Method I and Method II).

3. Students not belonging to either of the classes named above may pursue more than one professional subject during one term upon presenting reasons satisfactory to the heads of the departments in the professional work. Such students must show that the necessity for pursuing more than one professional subject during the term is not due to neglect in entering upon the professional work at the second term of the Sophomore year, nor to arrangements made concerning elective work that have brought about, unnecessarily, a conflict with the professional work.

Since the required professional course is not extensive in its range, a course including more extended professional study, and subjects regarded as contributing strongly to a professional preparation has been prepared. It is a three years' course for students who desire to make special preparation for supervisory work in city schools, for training school work, or for the position of assistant in the professional department in a normal school. This course is given on page 34.

EDUCATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY

HOWARD SANDISON, Professor.

CHARLES HOMER BEAN, Assistant Professor.

The work in psychology includes three courses in introspective psychology and three courses in experimental psychology, as follows:

INTROSPECTIVE PSYCHOLOGY

(Required work.)

Course I.—The work of the first course consists of a consideration of—

The material or subject-matter of psychology.

Its characteristic attribute.

The scope or extent of the subject.

Modes of investigation.

The essential standpoint in the study of the material.

General relation of psychology to the other branches of study.

The nervous organism as the physical basis of conscious activity.

General relation of the mind to neural action.

The nature of attention.

Sensation.

Educational principles or corollaries arising under each topic.

Course II.—In the second course an investigation of the stages of knowing is made. This course involves a study of—Presentation.

Perception.

Representation.

Imagination.

Memory.

Thought.

Understanding.

Conception.

Judgment.

Reasoning.

Inductive.

Deductive.

Educational principles or corollaries.

Course III.—The third course consists of the investigation of—

Feeling.

The effective element.

Reflex action and instinct.

Impulse.

Emotion.

Willing.

The nature of will.

Will and character.

The nature of the self.

Educational principles or corollaries.

The organization of general psychology.

The nature of educational psychology.

EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOLOGY

(Elective work.)

Course IV.—The problems of this first course in experimental psychology are—

The purposes of experimentation.

The relation of experimentation to introspection.

A study of the abilities with which a child begins life.

A systematic study of the development of motor control through reflexes, instincts and impulses, and the growth of the knowledge process by means of movement.

The deduction of certain educational corollaries from the above experiments.

The verification of some of these corollaries through their experimental use.

Course V.—This course is a consideration of problems under the following topics—

Further conditions of careful experimentation.

Vision and audition.

Studies in perception.

The phenomena of rhythm.

Educational corollaries and their verification.

Course VI.—The topics under which the problems of this course fall are—

Memory.

Ideation and types of imagery.

Feeling.

Volition.

Educational corollaries.

TEXT-BOOKS

Introspective Psychology: Psychology, by James R. Angell, published by Henry Holt and Company, New York. Price, $1.50. Psychology, by William James (briefer course) is used to some extent in collateral reading.

Experimental Psychology: Students need not purchase text-books for these courses. The needs of the work are met best by the selection of material from various books.

HISTORY OF EDUCATION

FRANCIS MARION STALKER, Professor.

This department traces the history of education as a distinct process in the life of the race, studies the growth and present condition of the school systems of the world, and acquaints the student with the vast field of educational literature. It is believed that such investigation will bring to the student of education broader culture, larger respect for the profession of teaching, and that it will open to him a field that will prove to be an abiding source of inspiration. Eight courses are offered; one required, and seven elective. While the progressive development in the education of mankind will be most apparent by a pursuit of the courses in the order named here, continuity in election is not insisted upon.

Course I.—A discussion of the meaning of education with a survey of the best literature upon the subject; an attempt to state the standard of measurement of a people's culture; a comparative study of the education of the peoples of the Orient; and a study of Hebrew culture in its different phases constitute the scope and indicate the nature of this course.

Each term.

Course II.—Greek and Roman Education. This course includes a comparative study of Spartan and Athenian education previous to the Periclean Age; a comparative study of Athenian education before and Athenian education after the change that took place in the Periclean Age, with the causes that brought the change; a brief survey of the rise of Greek philosophy; a study of Greek art and literature; a study of the chief facts in early Roman life and their educational significance; the change in Roman life and its effect upon education; the rise of Christianity; and an estimate of Roman art and literature. Fall, Winter and Spring terms.

Course III.—This course covers the period in history from Constantine to the Reformation and includes a consideration of the Alexandrian movement; the work of Constantine; the significant facts for education in the reign of Justinian; the work of Charlemagne and Alcuin; the rise of Scholasticism; the rise of universities; the development of the great monastic orders; the Reformation; the rise of modern philosophy; and a brief survey of the revival of art that attended these movements.

Winter, Spring and Summer terms.

Course IV.—Leading School Systems of Europe and America. A comparative study of German, French and English systems in the light of their historical development, and a like study of such systems as those of Massachusetts, New York and Rhode Island constitute the work of this course.

Fall and Summer terms.

Course V.—The School System and School Law of Indiana. The growth of the system in Indiana, educational legislation, the New Harmony experiment, the two constitutions, the work of such men as Caleb Mills, John I. Morrison, Robert Dale Owen and Barnabas Hobbs, the system as it is with its strength and its weakness, furnish the topics of discussion.

Spring term.

Course VI.—Supervision and School Management. A study is made of the school as an institution in relation to other institutions, with a consideration of equipment, factors, duties, course of study, and present day problems.

Fall term.

Course VII.—Ancient Educational Classics. A critical study of parts of Plato's Republic and Laws, Xenophon's Cyropaedia, Aristotle's Ethics and Politics, Quintilian's Institutes of Oratory, Plutarch's Moralia constitutes the work of the term.

Omitted 1906-07.

Course VIII.—Modern Educational Classics. A critical, comparative study of Comenius' Didactica Magna and Orbis Pictus, Rabelais' Gargantua, Locke's Thoughts on Education, Montaigne's Essays, Rousseau's Emile, Pestalozzi's How Gertrude Teaches Her Children, Richter's Levana, Froebel's Education of Man, Ascham's Schoolmaster, Herbart's Outline of Educational Doctrine, and Spencer's What Knowledge is of Most Worth, is made this term.

Winter term.

METHODS, OBSERVATION AND PRACTICE

ALBERT ROSS CHARMAN, Professor.

This department deals with the process of learning on both its theoretical and practical side. Part of the time is given to the study of the principles and methods of learning and part is given to the application of the principles and methods in the Training Schools, which are the students' pedagogical laboratories. The courses in the department are as follows: Two in methods, two in practice in the Training School, one in regular observation, and one in general observation. The two courses in observation are elective and the other four are required.

METHODS

Course I.—The first half of the term is given to the study of the educational situation in which the problem of method appears and involves a study of: (1) The nature of education in general, (2) the school as a social institution, as a legal institution and as a spiritual organization. The second half of the term is given to the study of the general conception of method with its stages of development and method as an objective and as a subjective process.

Course II.—Special Method. This involves a study of: (1) The application of the general conception of method to one or more branches of study; (2) Method applied to the lesson, the lesson viewed in relation to the other activities of the school; (3) Observation and interpretation of lessons given by teachers in the Practice Schools, the organization and planning of lessons.

PRACTICE

Course I.—In this course students are required to observe and teach in some or all of the eight grades in the City Training School and in the Rural Training School. The time given to teaching and observing is divided about equally. The aim is to give the student skill in organizing, planning and interpreting lessons, and also practice in presenting them. The time from 3:40 to 4:30 is given to discussion, not only of lessons observed and taught, but also of the principles underlying artistic teaching, organization of the school, curriculum, programme, etc.

Course II.—In this second course the time given to observing and teaching is about the same as in Course I. The students are allowed to emphasize the phase of work for which they are making special preparation in so far as practicable. The opportunity for observation is extended to the city schools of Terre Haute. Discussions from 3:40 to 4:30 are held frequently for the consideration of special problems, details of work and reports on work observed in other schools. Each student is to select some special educational problem and study it carefully during the term and write a paper setting forth the problem, its difficulties and his mode of solving it.

The aim in this term is to give the student every opportunity which the actual school affords to study the work of the school theoretically and practically and also to do, under criticism, all the work which a well organized school requires.

OBSERVATION

Course I.—Regular observation may be elected by any student in any term in the course. Part of the time is given to observation of lessons in the Training School and part is given to the discussion of the essential elements in the structure of the lesson in general and the consideration of them in connection with the lessons observed. Attention is also given to the organization of the common school branches and to questions of order, management and general organization of the school. Credit is given for this course.

Course II.—Besides the course in regular observation an opportunity is given for individual observation. This affords students a chance to observe the daily work of the school and thus become acquainted, to some extent, with the course of study, assignments, mode of presenting work, apparatus, reference books, programmes, etc. In addition to the observing of lessons, the students are at liberty to attend the discussion conducted by critic teachers in connection with the practice work at the close of the day. At the close of the term each observer is to make a brief report, indicating (1) time spent in observing, (2) subjects observed, (3) new views of teaching gained, (4) the plan for a lesson. No credit.

The facilities for observation and practice are quite complete.

The City Training School, which is now conducted in a new, modern building, has eight grades and eight teachers. The Rural Training School, six miles east of the city on an interurban car line, is a model district school, in charge of a professionally trained teacher. By an arrangement with the city school authorities, the members of the senior class of the Normal School are entitled to observation in all the grades, including the High School.

UNITED STATES HISTORY AND CIVIL GOVERNMENT

ELLWOOD WADSWORTH KEMP, Professor.
AUSTIN WILLIS INMAN, Spring Assistant.

The work of the department of United States History and Civil Government comprises nine terms. The work is intended to present a course for the eight grades and lead forward to the work in American History and Civil Government in the High School. The chief subjects discussed are: (1) The nature of history. (2) Principles underlying the development of history. (3) The relation of geography to history. (4) The principles underlying the selection of material and teaching of history. (5) The material of history adapted to grade work.

The work begins with the development of the early life of the Aryan race, and follows briefly the stages of its growth in general outline as it developed through Judea, Greece, Rome, Western Europe, and finally in America. This life is considered along with the life surrounding the pupil in the United States so that he may be able to compare the one with the other and gain a fuller view of the background of American History than he gains by beginning the study with the discovery of America.

Course I.—The aim of Course I is to present the principles upon which elementary history is based and the work of the first six grades. This course extends from the beginning of history to 1600 A. D.

Course II.—The aim of Course II is to present the work of the seventh and eighth grades. This course extends through the colonial history of America from 1600 to 1750.

Course III.—The aim of Course III is to show the growth of American history from 1750 to 1829.

Course IV.—The aim of Course IV is to present the history of the United States from 1829 to the present time, giving special attention to the political and constitutional questions which have arisen in our country during that time.

Course V.—The aim of Course V is to show the actual working of civil government at the present time in the United States. Hart's Actual Government and Bryce's American Commonwealth are used as texts.

Course VI.—A continuation of Course V.

Course VII.—The aim of Course VII is to present the method of history.

Courses VIII and IX. Omitted in 1906-07.

PHYSICS AND CHEMISTRY

ROBERT GREENE GILLUM, Professor.

EDWIN MORRIS BRUCE, Assistant Professor.

RICHARD CLYDE MACCLOSKEY, Laboratory Assistant.

PHYSICS

Course I.—(1) Matter and its divisions, properties and conditions, in which some attention is given to a discussion of the structure of matter, molecules, physical and chemical changes, the phenomena of attraction, cohesion, adhesion, capillarity, etc. (2) Mechanics: Motion and force, work and energy, gravitation, falling bodies, the pendulum, the simple machines, hydrostatics and pneumatics.

Course II.—(1) Sound: Nature of sound, velocity, reflection, refraction, characteristics of tone, forced and sympathetic vibrations, laws of vibrating, etc. (2) Heat: Nature of heat, temperature, thermometry, production and transference of heat, effects of heat, measurement of heat and relation of heat to work. (3) Light: Nature of radiation, velocity and intensity of light, reflection and refraction of light, spectra, chromatics, interference, polarization and optical instruments.

Course III.—Static and current electricity, magnetism, electric generators, electromagnetic induction, electrical measurements, and some of the more important applications of electricity. All points in the class work are fully illustrated by experiment.

The laboratory work in general physics is all quantitative work, and the time of each course for the first year is divided about equally between the recitation and the laboratory work.

Course Ia. In addition to the above courses, a course will be offered consisting of one term in physics and one in chemistry. This course is open to all students, but is especially arranged for those persons who expect to do grade work only, and is intended to aid the work in geography and physiology. The work may be taken to advantage at the beginning of the Normal School course.

Courses IV, V, VI.—Advanced Physics. The work of these courses will be more advanced work in physics in both the class and laboratory work, and will be arranged from term to term to suit the individual needs of the student. The laboratory is well equipped for work in physics, and each student is given every opportunity possible to make use of the apparatus. In all of the laboratory work careful notes of the results obtained are required.

SHOP WORK

Connected with the work in physics is a work shop, supplied with a work bench, a lathe, run by a motor, and a full set of tools. Regular instruction will be given to students, who wish it, in devising and making apparatus to illustrate the elementary principles of the subject, without having to depend upon the use of expensive apparatus made by regular dealers.

CHEMISTRY

Course I.—Non-metals. Chemical changes, some of the common elements and compounds, classification of elements, constant and multiple proportion.

Course II.—The metals. Classification of the metals, leading up to qualitative analysis.

Course III.—A brief course in organic chemistry, given with a view to aiding and supplementing the work in physiology.

Courses IV, V and VI.—Advanced Chemistry. Qualitative and quantitative analysis.

Advanced Standing.—Students who have had work in chemistry in an academy, high school or other school of good standing may, upon satisfactory evidence of having done good work, shorten the time of these courses.

Arrangements will be made to give some instruction in glass blowing, preparation of apparatus and such other lines of work as are of service to teachers of chemistry.

PHYSIOLOGY

LOUIS JOHN RETTGER, Professor.

———, Assistant Professor.

WILLIAM SCOTT, Laboratory Assistant.

The work of this department will consist of two courses in general physiology which are required of all students, and three courses in advanced work, which are electives for persons qualified to take the same.

With the present enlarged facilities of this department, it is the aim to place all the courses upon a real practical laboratory basis. It is hoped to extend to courses in physiology the same scientific methods of study now alone tolerated in related sciences. Physiology has been the last science in the common schools to move from the plane of bookishness and formal instruction to the practical, scientific, first-hand study of real physiological facts and phenomena.

The physiological laboratories are large, well-equipped rooms, with special tables for laboratory work. These tables are provided with compound microscopes, knives, needles and such other apparatus as is necessary in the study of the subject. In addition to over forty such individual table-places, the school possesses some of the best general apparatus available, such as myographs, sphygmographs, kymographs, tambours, induction-coils, etc. In this way the physiology of nerve and muscle stimulation, of reaction, of the blood flow, etc., is practically demonstrated.

The two courses of required work are to cover the ground usual in beginning courses, save that special instruction is added in the practical application of the methods of modern sanitary science.

The advanced courses furnish an additional year's work in the subject and are to prepare for efficient teaching of physiology in the higher grades and the high school. The first course will be in general vertebrate histology, and such gross anatomy as is necessary to interpret physiological phenomena. The possession of stains, reagents, microtomes, a large warm-chamber, etc., furnish good facilities for this course. The second course will be a course in vertebrate embryology. This course is offered inasmuch as many things in physiology derive their true significance only when viewed from the standpoint of their origin and development. The third course is devoted to a study of the elements of physiological chemistry, and consists of a hundred or more experiments in digestion, blood coagulation, and the qualitative and in a few instances the quantitative determination of the more important compounds occurring in the body. Students taking this course must have had the preliminary courses offered in the department of chemistry.

PUBLIC SCHOOL LIBRARY SCIENCE

ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM, Professor.

Three courses of instruction, constituting a year's work as one of four branches or subjects of study usually pursued at one time, are offered in the Department of Public School Library Science, to which all students of the school are eligible. Credits for satisfactory work done will be given on the regular curriculum of the school.

Course I.—The Use of the Library in Public School Work. The object is to prepare the teacher for intelligent, systematic and scholarly use of collections of books. Instruction is given in the use of catalogues, indexes, the classification and shelf-arrangement of books, the mechanical contrivances of authors, the scope, special value and methods of using such general reference matter as encyclopedias, dictionaries, atlases, periodical literature, public documents, children's books and pictures, the selection of books for school and teachers' libraries, and the relation of the library to the public school. Five recitations per week are required, with the usual time for preparation. This may be taken as one of the four regular subjects usually required of every student and full credit is given for the satisfactory completion of the term's work.

Courses II and III.—The Organization and Management of School Libraries. These courses, which are designed to teach the more technical work of the school librarian, are made as practical as possible. Instruction and constant practice are given in ordering, accessioning, classification, cataloguing, the preparation of books for the shelves, binding and repair work, care of pictures, charging systems, library laws, etc., including the making of bibliographies on assigned subjects. The usual time in class and work is required. Successful completion entitles the student to one regular credit for each course pursued.

The election of Course I does not necessitate the subsequent taking of further work in the department. Courses I and II may both be taken at one time, if the student desires.

LITERATURE

CHARLES MADISON CURRY, Professor.

MARY ELINOR MORAN, Assistant Professor.

ROSE MARION COX, Assistant Professor.

The object of all the work in literature is to help the student appreciate great books. To that end the work deals primarily with the literature itself. The problems connected with the teaching of the subject naturally receive considerable attention.

ELEMENTARY LITERATURE AND READING

Course I.—Detailed study of literary material suitable for use in advanced grades. The simpler laws of literary method are thus inductively developed, and the fact is made clear that a piece of literature is organic. Selections from a great many authors, and representing many type forms, are used.

Each term.

Course II.—Continuation of the preceding: A play of Shakespeare's, a typical novel, a typical essay and a long narrative poem.

Each term.

ADVANCED LITERATURE

Course I.—History of English Literature. An outline course in the development of English literature to the beginning of the nineteenth century. The aim is to gain a perspective of the entire literature as a basis for the more intensive study of special periods and authors. Special studies in Milton, Pope and Wordsworth. During the Fall and Winter this course is given in conjunction with Course IV in European History (English History), the class reciting half the time in each subject. In the Spring term the class recites every day.

Fall and Winter, and Spring terms.

Course II.—English Poetry. Studies in Tennyson, Browning and Matthew Arnold.

Fall and Spring terms.

Course III.—English Prose. The study of one or two masterpieces, such as Swift's Gulliver's Travels or Carlyle's Sartor Resartus, with briefer readings from other authors.

Summer term.

Course IV.—Shakespeare. The close study of a few, and the rapid reading of several of the plays in an effort to understand and appreciate the main elements of Shakespeare's power as an interpreter of life, and the main features of a dramatic treatment of material. Spring term.

Course V.—American Poetry. Studies in Poe, Longfellow, Lowell, Whittier, Bryant, Emerson, Holmes, Whitman and Lanier.

Fall and Spring terms.

Course VI.—American Prose. Studies of selected masterpieces from several of the following writers: Franklin, Irving, Poe, Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau, Lowell.

Winter and Summer terms.

Course VII.—Fiction. The development of the English novel, with the study of some half-dozen typical works of the last century.

Fall and Summer terms.

Course VIII.—General Literature. A consideration of the nature and elements of great books. Some one piece of world literature is made the center of the course. Choice is made from the following list: Homer's Iliad and Odyssey, Dante's Divine Comedy, Goethe's Faust, Cervantes' Don Quixote, Milton's Paradise Lost and Paradise Regained.

Winter and Summer terms.

GEOGRAPHY

CHARLES REDWAY DRYER, Professor.
WILLIAM ALLEN MCBETH, Assistant Professor.
HARRY MILTON CLEM, Spring Assistant.
J. ELLSWORTH EWERS, Spring Assistant.
ERNEST TILLMAN, Laboratory Assistant.

The work in geography is organized in accordance with the views of the leading German, British and American geographers, of which the following are among the best expressions:

“General geography deals with the general laws of the distribution of every class of phenomena on the earth’s surface.”—Neumann.

“Geography is the exact and organized knowledge of the distribution of phenomena on the surface of the earth, culminating in the explanation of the interaction of man with his terrestrial environment.”—Mill.

Geography is the science which deals with the distribution of features on the face of the earth and with the relations of its inhabitants to their environment.

The first great relation of geography is that of relief and climate, the second that of plant and animal life to both, the third that of man and his culture to all the rest, to his whole physical environment. The earth’s surface and man are the terminal links of the chain. No one of them can be understood without a knowledge of those which precede. The geography of man rests upon a very broad foundation of physical science and in turn forms a part of the foundations of history, sociology and political economy. Geography is the bridge which unites the sciences of nature with the sciences of man. If this view of geography is correct, there can be but one method of teaching it, the scientific method, by direct personal observation of the phenomena in the field and laboratory, with the actual objects in view wherever possible, and when that is impossible, with the best representations of them.

The geographical laboratory is planned as a workshop for the student and teacher. It is used for the storage and display of the best geographical material in the form of specimens, pictures, lantern slides, maps and models illustrating typical forms and distributions. Among these, and largely by their means, the student is expected to prepare his lesson for the recitation. The laboratory material includes Howell's models of the United States, Yellowstone Park, Canyon of the Colorado, High Plateaus of Utah, Wasatch and Uinta Mountains, Henry Mountains, Mount Vesuvius, Mount Shasta, Mont Blanc, Mount Desert Island, New Jersey and Southern New England; and a collection of fifteen hundred pictures and lantern slides and two thousand maps and drawings. The equipment is being constantly increased.

The school library contains everything available in the literature of geography, including numerous copies of the best reference books.

Six courses are given, including those topics which seem most fundamental and available for illustrating the general principles of the science and the best methods of its presentation.

Each course comprises about seventy hours.

Course I.—Physiography. The development of land forms. Classroom and laboratory work, with four to six field excursions. The field work is insisted upon as fundamental, and will be extended as facilities permit. Fall, Spring and Summer terms.

Course II.—Physiography. The sea, the atmosphere and climate. Classroom and laboratory work, with daily instrumental observations of the weather. The laboratory work is done with the co-operation of the department of physics and chemistry.

Every term.

Course III.—Geology. Must be preceded by Courses I and II. Lectures, laboratory and field work. Fall and Summer terms.

Course IV.—The regional geography of the United States. A fairly exhaustive study of our own country, its physiographic regions, climate, products and inhabitants, designed to afford a review and application of the principles learned in the preceding courses, and to emphasize the relations of human culture and industrial, commercial and social conditions to the physical environment. Must be preceded by Courses I and II. Classroom and laboratory work.

Every term.

Course V.—The regional geography of Europe and Asia. Must be preceded by Courses I and II. Lectures, recitations and seminar.

Fall and Winter terms.

Course VI.—The principles, problems and methods of geography. This course is planned for those who wish to make special preparation for teaching geography in grade or high schools. Lectures, laboratory work and seminar. Must be preceded by Courses I, II and IV or V.

Spring and Summer terms.

PENMANSHIP AND DRAWING

WILLIAM THOMAS TURMAN, Professor.

PENMANSHIP

All should write legibly. Courtesy requires it and business demands it. Rapid writing is necessary in business. To write legibly and rapidly and for a long period requires proper position that the work may be done with ease. The teacher, above all others, should be master of these requirements if he would teach others to write. Theory without work is dead.

One term is devoted to the subject of writing. Proper positions for desk and blackboard writing are explained and practiced. Unshaded work in script, figures and printing is used. The modern style capitals and small letters are standard. Any slant that gives legible, rapid writing may be used. Good board work must be done by every student.

DRAWING

Six courses are offered. Three courses required if the subject is elected. The teacher who is able to illustrate by a quickly executed drawing has a point of excellence that must command the attention of school people in general. The lack of this ability is acknowledged and deplored by the great majority of teachers.

The educational value of drawing is not to be underestimated. Careful observation, accuracy of representation, dispatch and neatness are shown nowhere better than in a problem in drawing, and together are a good indication of a student's ability and method. Add to these the cultivation of the imagination and the consideration and a better understanding of what is considered most beautiful in nature and in art, and there seem sufficient reasons for introducing this subject into our public school courses.

The purpose of instruction in this department is not to make artists or to help finish a few pretty things, but rather to help teachers prepare themselves so they may be able to present in a more pleasing and instructive manner all of the subjects in their school work.

During the six terms pencil, charcoal, pen, brush and color will be used. Board work will be emphasized, and, whenever practicable, outdoor work will be undertaken.

Course I.—Drawing from familiar objects, of simple form. Landscape and still life in the most simple treatment. Constructive drawing and geometric problems. Fall, Spring and Summer terms.

Course II.—More advanced work of preceding term and drawing from forms which involve a consideration of rules of perspective. Pictorial and decorative composition. Geometric problems.

Winter term.

Course III.—Perspective problems. More advanced geometric work and design. Study of masterpieces. Fall and Spring terms.

Course IV.—Drawing from casts and from life and more advanced work in preceding subjects.

Winter and Summer terms.

Course V.—Above continued. Special consideration of different mediums. Art history.

Winter term.

Course VI.—Drawing in connection with other subjects. Schoolroom decoration. Drawing courses and the supervisor. Art history. Summer term.

GRAMMAR AND COMPOSITION

JOHN BENJAMIN WISELY, Professor.

MARY JOSEPHINE ANDERSON, Assistant Professor.

ERLE ELSWORTH CLIPPINGER, Assistant Professor.

CHARLOTTE BERTHA SCHWEITZER, Spring Assistant.

CLY M. HUMSTON, Spring Assistant.

The work of this department consists of two distinct lines—the grammar, the unit or subject-matter of which is the sentence, and the composition, the unit or subject-matter of which is discourse. The chief mental process involved in the mastery of the first is analysis; in the second it is synthesis.

GRAMMAR

The sentence, with its numerous forms and many shades of meaning, is the subject of grammar. This great variety must be thought into the unity of a single principle. Every fact of the subject must be interpreted and seen in the light of this principle, if grammar is to be understood. That there is and must be such a general truth in every subject is clear, from the fact that subjects exist. It is not chance or caprice that has separated facts into arithmetic, geography, grammar, etc. There must be some idea in the subject which determines what facts belong to it, and to which all these facts are related. This will be the most general fact in the subject, since it must contain all the others, and every fact in the subject will embody, in a greater or less degree, this central idea, thus making the subject a unity.

It is the purpose of the grammar work in this school to enable the student to get such a view of the subject. The student must see all the relations which exist in the sentence; the relation of the sentence to other language forms, the word and discourse; its relation to the thought which it expresses; and its relations to mind, the products of which it embodies. When he sees all these relations and what they determine with regard to the sentence, the student may be said to have an organized or a teaching knowledge of the subject of grammar. He has constructed the subject for himself.

In order to accomplish what is set forth above, four circles of work are pursued:

1. Under the study of the sentence as a whole, the class whole is studied. In this work the unity of all sentences is seen by observing their universal attributes.

2. Under the study of the sentence as a whole, the class whole is divided into sub-classes, and the marks of these classes are discovered.

3. Under the study of sentences in parts, the organic parts are first taken up. This circle of work with parts corresponds to the first circle of work with sentences as wholes.

4. Under the study of sentences in parts, the sub-classes of words, "Parts of Speech," are studied. The fourth circle of the work is to the third what the second is to the first.

In each of the four circles the student starts with the sentence, and after the consideration of parts, refers them all back to the sentence again—analysis and synthesis. The process is a passing from unity through variety back to the unity of the thought as expressed in the universal sentence form.

It is the purpose, also, to present the entire work in such a way as to give the student most skill in the use of the language.

The following courses in grammar are offered:

Course I.—The thought and its elements, the sentence and its parts, kinds of ideas and classes of words used in expressing them, modifiers, the simple sentence and classes of words used in forming it, their uses and modifiers, and the phrase.

Course II.—The clause, the compound sentence, uses of words, phrases, and clauses in forming it, the complex sentence, uses of words, phrases and clauses in forming it, with especial emphasis upon the connectives in the complex sentence.

Course III.—Parts of speech and their properties, the infinitive, and the participle.

COMPOSITION

The language subjects, which deal with discourse, are distinguished from one another by the view they take of the subject-matter. Reading and literature deal with discourse analytically; the chief mental process in composition and rhetoric is synthesis. Composition is the complement of reading. It presents the nature and principles of the different forms of discourse, and their relations to the mind of the author and the minds of those addressed.

Three kinds of work are done in this subject:

1. A critical study of models of the different forms of discourse is made for the purpose of enabling the student to discover the central idea in all discourse, the relations in the process as determined by the theme, and the laws of the process as determined by the mind addressed. For this purpose, masterpieces of our best writers are used as far as practicable. In this way the student becomes acquainted with the principles of discourse in their concrete embodiment, and forms a good standard by which to criticize his own writing.

2. The students are helped to formulate the above mentioned inferences into the science of discourse by reference to different texts on the subject.

3. A great deal of writing under careful criticism is required.

The following courses in composition are offered:

Course I.—The work deals with the discourse forms of description and narration and gives instruction in the theory and the practice of English composition. The theory of composition is taught by recitations based upon Baldwin's College Manual of Rhetoric, supplemented by the best texts in our tolerably complete text-book library, and by oral and written exercises. The practice is obtained in the writing of daily themes, some of which are written in the classroom, on topics announced after the class has assembled; and in the writing of longer themes prepared fortnightly.

These daily and long themes are carefully criticised by the teacher and returned to the student, most of them to be rewritten. Regular consultation hours are appointed and each student is required, at frequent intervals, to discuss his work with his teacher.

A good deal of reading is required in this course aside from text-books. The short stories of Hawthorne, Poe, Dickens, Kipling, Stevenson, together with the descriptions from some of these and from Thackeray and Irving are made use of in the course.

Students who are required to take the grammar are not eligible to this course until that work has been completed.

Course II.—The practical work of this course consists mainly in writing exposition and illustrates the work which may be required of high school students. The elements and the qualities of style are discussed and illustrated from standard authors.

The short daily themes and the longer weekly themes are carefully criticised. Explanations and comments upon these criticisms will receive much emphasis in class conferences, since the heavy work for the teacher of composition lies in marking the written work of pupils and helping them to correct their errors. This course has been planned especially to meet the needs of teachers of composition.

Course III.—This course deals with argumentation. The theory of argumentation is taught by recitations based upon Baker's Principles of Argumentation, supplemented by references to our text-book library. Students are required to prepare two complete written arguments of twenty-five to thirty pages each, for which they previously prepare complete, written briefs. In addition to this each student debates at least three times orally. He is expected to prepare carefully briefs for these debates and to furnish the teacher with at least one written brief. The written arguments are carefully criticized by the teacher and returned to the student for rewriting. For purposes of debate, the class is divided into sections of four and the discussions of each section are carefully criticised in recitation by the members of other sections and by the teacher.

Course IV.—This is a course in public speaking. The purpose of the course is to study carefully, by lectures, classroom work, and writing, the forms of public address; to provide opportunity for the practice of the element of persuasion, discussed in Course III; and to emphasize the importance of style in public discourse.

Each student will write at least five addresses of about 1,000 words each. In the selection of topics and in the treatment of them students will be allowed considerable freedom, but they will be required to select such topics as will give them practice in the eulogy, platform or commemorative address, commencement address, after-dinner speech, etc.

The delivery of these addresses before the class enables the students, to some extent, to wear off their embarrassment before an audience, and to obtain such self-control as will permit them to think with some degree of ease upon their feet and in the presence of people.

Incidentally, careful attention is given to distinct utterance, pronunciation, articulation, etc., and to the student's position on the floor, gesture, etc.

In the way of models for study in this course, the students have access to Reed's Modern Eloquence, Warner's Library of the World's Best Literature, etc.

Courses II, III, and IV are elective. They are open to students who have completed Course I. The student is advised to take them in the order in which they are here indicated. However, changes may be made to suit the needs of the student by consulting the head of the department.

MATHEMATICS

OSCAR LYNN KELSO, Professor.

FRANK RAWDON HIGGINS, Assistant Professor.

WALTER PIETY MORGAN, Assistant Professor.

JAMES HENRY BAXTER, Assistant Professor.

MARTINA ERICKSON, Dean of Women.

DANIEL W. WERREMEYER, Spring Assistant.

R. E. CAVANAUGH, Spring Assistant.

Fifteen courses are offered.

Course I.—Arithmetic. The origin and expression of number, the fundamental operations, fractions, English and French systems of weights and measures, ratio, proportion, and involution and evolution.

Every term.

Course II.—Arithmetic. Percentage and its applications and mensuration.

Every term.

Course III.—Elementary algebra. The conventions, the fundamental processes, the system of rational numbers, and linear equations. Every term.

Course IV.—Elementary algebra. Integral functions, fractional functions and equations.

Every term.

Course V.—Elementary algebra. Laws of exponential operations, the systems of irrational numbers (including imaginaries) and equations. Every term.

Course VI.—Advanced algebra. Series and related subjects. Dixon's College Algebra is used as the basis of this course. Fall and Spring terms.

Course VII.—Plane geometry. Elementary definitions, axioms, postulates, rectilinear figures, circles, constructions and exercises. Fall and Spring terms.

Course VIII.—Plane geometry. Proportions, pencils of lines, parallels and anti-parallels, similar figures, partition of the perigon, mensuration, constructions and exercises. Winter and Summer terms.

Course IX.—Solid and spherical geometry.

Fall and Spring terms.

Course X.—Trigonometry. Functions, formulae, equations and solutions of triangles.

Fall and Summer terms.

Course XI.—Analytic geometry. The point, its coordinates (Cartesian and polar) and their transformations. The straight line, its equation and transformation. The circle and its equation.

Winter term.

Course XII.—Differential calculus. Text: Murray's Infinitesimal Calculus.

Spring term.

Course XIII.—History and teaching of mathematics (arithmetic, algebra, geometry and trigonometry) as based on Smith's The Teaching of Elementary Mathematics.
Summer term.

Course XIV.—Analytic geometry. Conic sections through the parabola, ellipse and hyperbola, the general equation of the second degree and some of the higher plane curves.
Summer of 1907.

Course XV.—Integral calculus. Text: Murray's Calculus.
Summer of 1906.

Those students who have had courses of mathematics in high schools, or the equivalent in other schools, should not go over all of the algebra and geometry again, but should enter the work in mathematics further in the course.

There is no objection to a student carrying more than one subject in mathematics in a given term with the advice of the department.

LATIN

JOHN JACOB SCHLICHER, Professor.

FREDRICK HENRY WENG, Assistant Professor.

GUY C. HANNA, Spring Assistant.

R. EMMETT CAVANAUGH, Spring Assistant.

All students electing Latin are required to pursue it for at least three terms. Those who do elementary work (Latin I to V), however, may not discontinue the subject until they have finished Latin V, or some higher term.

Course VII may be taken before Course VI, and in cases of necessity Course V may be taken before Course IV. All the courses beyond VII may be taken in any order that suits the student's programme. But when students have had their elementary work in other schools, or when they have not been in regular attendance at the Normal school for some time, they should consult the head of the department about the courses which it would be advisable for them to elect first.

Courses I, II and III.—The Elements of Latin. The forms and common constructions of the language, with daily English and Latin exercises; detailed study and comparison of the structure of the two languages, and observation of the English words derived from Latin. Given each term.

Courses IV and V.—Caesar and Nepos. Three books of Caesar and several biographies of Nepos, with a careful study of the construction of the Latin sentence in these authors; exercises in grammar and composition. Provision is made for these courses each term.

Courses VI and VII.—Cicero's Orations and Virgil's Aeneid, with prose composition and metrical reading. The literary phase of the authors is made more prominent than in the preceding courses, and frequent written translations are made and criticized in class as a regular part of the work. One course given each term.

Advanced Courses VIII-XIII.—These courses extend through two years with the following alternatives: Livy or Sallust; Pliny's or Cicero's Letters; Plautus or Terence; Horace's Odes or Catullus and Martial; Horace's Satires and Epistles or Virgil's Eclogues and Georgics; Cicero's De Senectute and Tusculan Disputations, or Tacitus' Agricola and Dialogus. At least one of these courses is given each term.

In these courses four exercises a week are devoted to the study and interpretation of the author, and one exercise to some collateral line of work, such as a branch of ancient literature, the biography and literary activity of the author, Roman life, the monuments and remains of Rome or Pompeii, or one of the lines of work mentioned in Courses XIV and XV.

Course XIV.—Advanced Grammar and Composition. (a) An introduction to scientific grammar. (b) Advanced exercises in composition. The whole course is given every second spring or summer and parts of it when desired as supplementary work in the advanced courses mentioned above.

Course XV.—Teachers' Course. (a) A discussion of the problems, aims and methods of teaching Latin in the high school, with special stress upon the work of the first two years. (b) An outline of various collateral lines of reading and study that are necessary or helpful to the student and teacher of Latin. The members of the class are put in contact with the books and works of reference in the library and are required to familiarize themselves with a few of the best works in each line. The course is given in the same way as XIV and alternates with it.

PHYSICAL TRAINING

JOHN PATTON KIMMEL, Professor (Men).

FLORENCE BERTHA CURRY, Professor (Women).

The two gymnasiums are equipped with modern appliances and apparatus for developing and training the body. Connected with each are baths, with hot and cold water. Before entering the gymnasium a physical examination, consisting of measurements and tests, is made for each student. The condition of heart, lungs, digestion and nervous system is carefully noted; also any local defects, such as round shoulders, muscular weakness in any part, abnormal curvature of the spine, varicose veins, etc. Exercises are prescribed for the special needs of individual students, who may then work toward building up the whole body.

Class work consists of carefully graded work in light and heavy gymnastics, free-hand exercises, games and sports of various kinds. Swimming and lawn tennis, basket ball and other games and sports are available in spring, summer and fall terms. Special work in public school gymnastics, lectures upon personal hygiene, school sanitation and physical defects common to school children, are included.

Three terms in this department are required, for which one credit is given.

Parsons Field, with baseball diamond, running track and gridiron is available for athletic sports.

Athletics and all contest games are under the control of the Athletic Association, an organization of students.

MUSIC

LELLA ANNE PARR, Professor.

EMMA ABBETT, Spring Assistant.

B. PEARL ELLIS, Spring Assistant.

The work of this department is elective.

Course I.—Rote songs that are used later as a basis for sight-reading, study of rhythm; major, chromatic and minor scales; elementary work in ear-training, expression, invention and harmony. Book used, Eleanor Smith's Common School Music book, of the Modern Music Series.

Course II.—Ear-training, invention and harmony continued. Independent sight-singing gained.

Course III.—Battle-hymns, ballads, hymns, songs and choruses that may be taught in the grades or high school. Stories of great musicians culled, and arranged for use in public schools. Book used, The Ensign Collection, by Lella Parr.

Course IV.—Composition and analysis. Book of reference used—Percy Goetschius' Inventions. Harmony, including first law of harmonization by Logier, intervals, triads, figured bass, inversions of triads, chords of the dominant, inverted, secondary and diminished sevenths. Neapolitan sixths and modulation. Book used—Emery's Elementary Harmony.

Course V.—Advanced harmony.

Course VI.—Material of preceding courses classified and arranged for each year, month and week of the grades and high school. Method of presenting this material studied.

Course VII.—Practice in teaching music in the training school. Observation in city grades and high school.

Three additional credits will be given for the following work:

1. For three terms of practice in the Chorus Class.
2. For one season of practice with the Terre Haute Symphony Orchestra.
3. For a certificate of proficiency from a reputable piano teacher in playing accompaniments for songs, etc., as outlined in Course VI.

Course I and 1, 2 and 3 may be taken as fifth subjects.

GERMAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

FREDERICK GILBERT MUTTEBER, Professor.

FREDERICK HENRY WENG, Assistant Professor.

German is entirely elective. Courses I-IV are known as Elementary German; Courses V and VI as Intermediate German; and Courses VII-XV as Advanced German. The student entering upon the elementary work is required to complete it, unless he has had thorough instruction in the same subject-matter elsewhere, and enters upon the work here to review a particular subject with the purpose of entering better prepared in the more advanced courses. The only condition put upon the student taking up work in the intermediate and advanced courses is, that he have the preparation to pursue the work he selects to his advantage. The student may select more than one course each term provided he choose such additional courses as he can profitably pursue.

Elementary German, Courses I-IV.—The aim of these courses is a knowledge of the grammatical principles of the German language, an understanding of simple German conversation, the power of speaking and writing in simple sentences, and the ability to read readily easy German verse and prose. The German language is from the beginning, as far as possible, the medium of instruction. These courses can be taken only in their regular order, and the entire course, or a satisfactory equivalent in high school work, must precede any of the higher courses. Course V may be substituted for Course IV.

Course I.—Elementary German grammar and reading.

Course III.—Course II continued. Reading a modern short story or comedy.

Course IV.—Inductive reading of modern prose with weekly composition and grammar.

Intermediate German. Courses V and VI constitute this group. The aim is facility in interpreting any piece of German writing of ordinary difficulty rapidly, and easily expressing, orally or written, simple thoughts in German, and an acquaintance with German thought, and manner of life through the literature. A systematic study of word forms, word derivations, idioms and German syntax will be made. German is the medium of instruction.

Course V.—Reading, modern historic prose, or equivalent, with weekly composition and grammar.

Course VI.—Free composition.

Advanced German. Courses VII-XV constitute this group. At least one of these is given each term. The recitations are conducted entirely in the German language. The courses are rapid reading courses, supplemented by essay writing and other composition exercises. The works read are studied from the literary as well as from the linguistic standpoint. Each author is viewed in relation to his time and the whole literary movement of the German people.

Course VII.—Reading from two or more of these dramatists: Heinrich von Kleist, Franz Grillparzer, Friedrich Hebbel, Otto Ludwig, Hermann Sudermann, Gerhart Hauptmann.

Course VIII.—Lessing's Minna von Barnhelm and Nathan der Weise.

Course IX.—Schiller's Wallenstein, or two of his shorter dramas.

Course X.—Reading selections from the German Romanticists, with study of the romantic school.

Course XI.—Reading of German lyrics and selections from epics, with discussions on the historic development of the lyric and epic literature.

Courses XII and XIII.—Goethe's Faust.

Course XIV.—An outline course in the history of German literature.

Course XV.—Advanced free composition.

EUROPEAN HISTORY

FRANK SMITH BOGARDUS, Professor.

The work of this department is so planned as to give an opportunity for four years' consecutive work in European history. The purpose is to lead the student to trace the growth of civilization among European peoples, and in this way to arrive at an intelligent conception of the life and institutions of the present time. In order to accomplish this purpose extensive use of the library in the way of reference reading is made by all classes. Special attention is paid to sources of information in all of the courses, the amount and difficulty of this work with source-material progressively increasing with the courses. It is believed that the use of source-material is better adapted to secure the growth of a truly scholarly attitude toward the work than any other means at our command. The library is admirably equipped for the work of this department, the collection of works on English history being unusually complete.

Occasional lectures and discussions of the pedagogical phases of the work find a place in all of the courses. The thought that they are some time to teach this subject to their own pupils is kept before the students.

Courses I and II are introductory to the more advanced courses. Accordingly, the work of these courses is directed largely toward securing correct habits of study and thought in the field of history.

A thesis of moderate length on a specially assigned topic is required in the more advanced courses. This paper must be accompanied by a bibliography and references.

It is believed that the completion of these courses will prepare the industrious student to teach the subject acceptably in the elementary and secondary schools.

Course I.—Greek history with a brief survey of the ancient Oriental nations by way of introduction.

Winter and Summer terms.

Course II.—History of Rome to the fall of the Empire in the West, 476 A. D. Fall and Spring terms.

Course III.—History of the Middle Ages to the close of the fifteenth century.

Fall and Spring terms.

Course IV.—English history to 1814. This course is offered in conjunction with Course I Advanced Literature. The plan is as follows: Two terms are devoted to this combination course, the student giving one-half of his time to each subject each term and being credited accordingly. The Fall term's work will extend to 1603; the Winter term's work from 1603 to 1815. This course will be offered during the Summer term not in combination with the literature. Students wishing to take this course in the Fall and Winter without taking the literature may do so.

Fall and Winter and Summer terms.

Course V.—Modern European history. The attention of the student in this course is centered upon the continental nations of western Europe, England receiving only incidental attention on account of the fact that a course devoted entirely to English history is offered as Course IV. The same thing so far as England is concerned is true of Course III.

Winter and Spring terms.

Course VI.—Political Development of Europe in the Nineteenth Century. Summer term.

Course VII.—This course takes up one of the following topics each term—

a. Europe and America, 1492-1789. Fall term.

b. Europe and the United States, 1789-1875.

Winter term.

c. Industrial History of England. Spring term.

d. The Rise of Prussia.

e. Government in England.

f. The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era.

ZOÖLOGY AND BOTANY

ULYSSES ORANGE COX, Professor.

_____, Assistant Professor.

ROSCOE RAYMOND HYDE, Laboratory Assistant.

In addition to the usual morphology in zoölogy and botany, special attention is given to systematic relationships, life histories and ecology. Frequent field excursions constitute a required part of the work.

The purpose of the work of this department is not so much the teaching of anatomical facts as the habits of living organisms and to instill in those who pursue these subjects the habits of correct observation and a love for nature.

It is believed that the scientific course outlined elsewhere in this catalogue will meet the needs of many teachers who wish to prepare themselves to teach the sciences in high schools. Numerous calls have come to this department during the past year for such teachers. Persons who are thinking of specializing in zoölogy or botany should consult the head of the department for a detailed outline of the course.

ZOÖLOGY

Six courses are offered in zoölogy. The first three are devoted to a thorough study of general zoölogy and consist of daily recitations and laboratory work. As to terms the subject is divided about as follows:

Course I.—A study of the lower invertebrates up to and including insects. Careful attention is given to the study of the cell under protozoa, and life histories and economic relationships are important phases of the insect work. Students are required to make accurate dissections of the chief types of animals represented in these groups.

Fall, Spring and Summer terms.

Course II.—Mollusks, primitive vertebrates and fishes. Considerable attention is given to the systematic study of fishes.

Winter term.

Course III.—Batrachians, reptiles, birds and mammals. Besides the dissection of the types of each group, special attention is given to systematic and ecological relationships, and students are expected to familiarize themselves with the common batrachians, reptiles, birds and mammals of the region.

Spring term.

Course IV.—General histology of animal forms. This is chiefly a laboratory course in which the student is given an opportunity to learn the methods employed in histology and to prepare for himself a set of microscopical slides.

Fall term.

Course V.—Advanced systematic zoölogy of special groups.

Winter term.

Course VI.—Embryology, advanced cytology and general biological problems.

Spring term.

BOTANY

Seven courses are offered in botany. The first three courses are devoted to general botany and include daily recitations and laboratory work. Students may begin the subject with either Course I, II, III or VII.

Course I.—The subjects for this course are: The plant cell, slime fungi, bacteria, diatoms, algæ and fungi. Each type is carefully studied in the laboratory and students are expected to collect, identify and preserve specimens of those forms that can be easily preserved. Fall and Spring terms.

Course II.—The mosses and ferns. In addition to a careful study of the structure of the leading types students learn to identify the common forms.

Winter and Summer terms.

Course III.—The seed plants. A careful study of the higher seed plants is made and students are required to carry on experiments in germination and related subjects. During the latter part of the course a systematic study of the more common flowering plants of Indiana is made. Spring term.

Course IV.—Physiological botany. This is chiefly a laboratory course, but it is supplemented by frequent lectures and library work. Students who expect to enter this course should have had courses I, II and III, and some knowledge of chemistry is desirable. Fall term.

Course V.—Plant histology. This is a laboratory course, in which the student is given an opportunity to familiarize himself with the methods employed in plant histology and to prepare a set of microscopical slides. The laboratory is fully equipped with warm oven, microtomes and other necessary apparatus for this work.

Winter term.

Course VI.—A laboratory and field course in general ecology. To enter this course students must have had courses I, II and III or their equivalent.

Spring term.

Course VII.—Open to beginners. This is a course in general botany with special emphasis on forestry, and it is offered mainly for the benefit of those teachers who can, at present, spend but one term on the subject, but who wish to prepare themselves to teach some elementary plant lessons in their schools. Some work is done with seeds and germination and enough time is spent on the flowering plants to enable teachers to recognize the more common species. A careful study of the trees in this vicinity is made and the subject of forestry is discussed. The work consists of daily recitations and two hours additional in the laboratory or field.

Summer term.

MANUAL TRAINING AND MECHANICAL DRAWING

MERIT LEES LAUBACH, Professor.

MANUAL TRAINING

The object of the work in this department is to give instruction in those forms of hand work that are most suitable for school use and to study these from an educational point of view. The work is planned to meet the needs of both the special teacher and the regular grade teacher. Course I may be taken at such time as will best suit the individual needs of the students. Courses II, III, IV and V should be taken in the order in which they are here indicated.

Course I.—Hand Work for the Primary Grades. The aim of this course is to give instruction in those forms of hand work that have proved the most practical and profitable in the lower grades of the elementary school, before a special laboratory is available. It will include practical work and discussion of processes in clay modeling, weaving, basketry, cord work, and construction in paper, cardboard, bent-iron and wood. A study will be made of these forms of work as related to other school work and to industry. Every term.

Course II.—Wood-working for the Elementary Schools. This course deals with wood-working as carried on in a special laboratory. It aims primarily to give a training in the technical processes as a basis for instruction in the elementary school. Instruction will be given in the use, construction, and care of tools. A study will be made of the growth of woods, their qualities and structure. Students are expected to design models and work out projects to meet certain conditions. Every term.

Course III.—This course carries on the work of the preceding course in an effort to give a more thorough training in wood-working as a basis for teaching in the upper grammar grades. Special attention will be given to the consideration of courses suitable for these grades. Fall and Spring terms.

Course IV.—Wood-Working for Secondary School. The work in this course will be more advanced work, and aims to prepare for the teaching of wood-working in the secondary school. It will deal with the problems of construction in wood suitable for the first year of the high school. A part of the time during this course will be given to lectures on the history of manual training and to discussion of some educational phases of the work. Problems relating to the organization of manual training, equipments, and costs will be discussed. In courses II, III and IV considerable attention will be given to methods of finishing and to simple means of decoration.

Fall, Spring and Summer terms.

Course V.—Wood-Turning. This course deals with various methods of turning in soft and hard woods.

Winter term.

MECHANICAL DRAWING

One course is offered. It is devoted chiefly to the principles and practice of the working drawing. It covers the fundamentals of what should be taught in the upper grammar grades and lower high school grades.

Winter term.

LIBRARY

ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM, Head Librarian.
ANNE CLARE KEATING, First Assistant.
MABEL E. MARSHALL, Second Assistant.
CARABELLE GREINER, Spring Assistant.

The library at present contains over forty thousand volumes. The old library having been entirely destroyed, the books we have are new and carefully selected with reference to the special needs of our school, so that the number alone gives no real conception of its working capacity. A special fund enables us to buy such books and periodicals as are needed in the regular work of the school, and the design is to build up gradually and steadily a large reference library especially strong in pedagogical literature.

PURPOSE, AIM, METHODS.

The library is the general laboratory, or workshop of the whole school. Text-books serve their more legitimate function as guides in the various subjects taught, and students are sent to the library with references, more or less specific according to their advancement and individual needs, to the leading authorities and sources of information.

Instruction in the use of the library is both general and specific. The general instruction is now offered in the Department of Public School Library Science and by lectures to the new students at the beginning of each term. Specific, individual assistance, so far as other duties of the staff will permit, is also rendered in the search for the latest and best information upon particular topics, in the selection of books for collateral and general reading, and in helping to answer the great number of questions that continually arise in the course of one's reading.

An immediate advantage of a systematic use of the library is the conversion of the routine and spiritless recitation of the old regime into a varied and animated presentation of subject-matter gleaned from various authorities and sources of information. There is here also an opportunity to meet those individual needs that are determined by the laws of heredity, physiological accidents and previous training. A knowledge of books, a breadth of view, and an enthusiasm for truth are permanent and sure results of a right use of the library. By systematic training in scholarly habits of research, it is believed that a pupil will leave this school greatly strengthened and enabled to pursue successfully his life work.

The librarians are ready and willing to give all necessary help in the finding and selection of books, but the catalogue and classification will answer all ordinary questions.
